- Not copy, distribute, publish, reuse or commercialise CheckUpp-specific information, source code or intellectual property outside the authorised scope of the project.
- Follow all applicable data privacy, cybersecurity and secure-development requirements.

Confidential information includes, but is not limited to:

- Product concepts, features and requirements
- Healthcare workflows and screening processes
- Preventive screening and reminder logic
- CheckUpp-specific data models
- Application logic and product-specific source code
- AI and automation components developed specifically for CheckUpp
- Technical architecture and security designs
- User information and healthcare-related data
- Business strategies and commercial information
- Product roadmaps and feature priorities
- Login credentials, repositories and development environments
- Documents, discussions, designs, presentations, meeting notes, recordings, test results and other information shared during the project

All intellectual property created specifically for CheckUpp, including its product features, user workflows, product-specific data models and unique application logic, remains the property of CheckUpp.

Anodiam's pre-existing frameworks, reusable development tools, generic AI components, software libraries, engineering methodologies and architectural patterns remain Anodiam's background intellectual property. However, no confidential CheckUpp information or CheckUpp-specific code may be reused or redistributed.

These confidentiality obligations apply throughout your participation in the project and continue after your involvement or the project collaboration ends in relation to confidential information and intellectual property received during the engagement.
